

Timeline of Philanthropic Support for Black Men and Boys

1992 to present

Foundation / Nonprofit Activity

Historical Context

Published Report / Article

1992

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation launches the African American Men and Boys Initiative, led by Dr. Bobby Austin, to repair the breach between Black males and the rest of society.

Police officers are acquitted in the beating of Rodney King, sparking the Los Angeles civil unrest.

1993

Arthur Ashe, legendary tennis player, is posthumously awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by President Bill Clinton.

The Indiana Commission on the Social Status of Black Males is formed to improve the quality of life for Black males and address the challenges they face.

Advocate Oscar Wright files a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights against Oakland Unified School District for denying Black students the same access to college preparatory and advanced curricula as other students. The Department orders the school district to provide equal access to educational resources.

1994

The Ford Foundation, Annie E. Casey Foundation, and Charles Stewart Mott Foundation develop fatherhood initiatives, which include a focus on African-American families.

Dr. Cornel West joins the faculty of Harvard University and the "dream team" of scholars in the university's African-American Studies Department.

1995

The Urban Institute, funded by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, releases a report profiling 51 effective and promising programs serving African-American male youth.

The Million Man March is held at the National Mall in Washington, D.C. to "convey to the world a vastly different picture of the Black male."

1996

The National Task Force on African-American Men and Boys, established by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, releases Repairing the Breach: Key Ways to Support Family Life, Reclaim Our Streets, and Rebuild Civil Society in America's Communities. Washington Post columnist, Bill Raspberry, calls it "the plan to save America."

The MacArthur Foundation awards its "genius" grant to Bill Strickland, President and CEO of Manchester Bidwell Corporation and its subsidiaries, which offer successful job training and after-school programs.

1997

The W.K. Kellogg Foundation launches the Village Foundation, the first foundation focused solely on the needs of Black boys and men.

Led by Geoffrey Canada, the Harlem Children's Zone Project begins, with a network of programs for a 24-block area of Harlem. The program is now a national model for education and breaking the cycle of generational poverty.

1998

The Village Foundation adopts and begins funding the National African-American Male Collaboration, a network of 32 grassroots, direct service providers offering a wide array of services to Black men and boys.

Congress passes the Workforce Investment Act, creating a universal system of one-stop career centers that provide training and employment services.

1999

Maurice Ashley becomes the first African-American Grand Master of Chess.

African-American farmers win a class action lawsuit against the U.S. Department of Agriculture for racial discrimination in its allocation of farm loans and assistance.

2000

South Carolina is the last state in the U.S. to make Martin Luther King, Jr. Day a paid holiday for all state employees.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Village Foundation form a joint venture to save African-American family farms.

2001

General Colin Powell becomes the first African American to serve as U.S. Secretary of State.

Congress passes the No Child Left Behind Act, supporting standards-based education reform.

2002

The University System of Georgia launches the African-American Male Initiative to recruit, retain, and graduate Black male college students.

The Dellums Commission, funded by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation and chaired by Ron Dellums, is formed to research conditions faced by young men of color and to produce policy recommendations for reducing disparities.

2003

The Schott Foundation for Public Education begins its Black Boys Initiative, to improve the educational experiences of Black boys and to ensure that they graduate from high school with the confidence to become successful members of society.

The U.S. Supreme Court issues a ruling on affirmative action in higher education, upholding the use of race in admissions policies.

- 2004  The Kapor Center for Social Impact begins groundwork for what is now the College Bound Brotherhood.
-  The Schott Foundation for Public Education publishes its first 50-state report card on high school graduation rates of Black male students.
- 2005  Chicago's Third World Press, one of the oldest African-American publishing houses in the U.S., establishes the Black Male Development Symposium (BMDS) to promote community discussions on the status of African-American males. Today, BMDS is housed at Arcadia University under the leadership of Dr. Doreen Loury.
-  Hurricane Katrina hits the Gulf Coast. African Americans make up a disproportionate share of the storm's victims.
- 2006  The Twenty-First Century Foundation develops the 2025 Network for Black Men and Boys, a national network of advocates for Black men and boys.
-  The New York Times publishes the front page story, "Plight Deepens for Black Men, Studies Warn," based on Ronald Mincy's book, Black Males Left Behind. The Association of Black Foundation Executives convenes members to discuss philanthropy's response to the crisis.
-  Pipeline Crisis/Winning Strategies is created. The initiative is a diverse collaborative to mobilize private sector leadership, investments, and advocacy in support of social and economic equality for young Black men.
-  The police shooting of Sean Bell in New York City grabs national headlines.
-  The Tom Joyner Foundation begins the Hercules Scholarship, providing financial assistance to successful male students attending historically Black colleges and universities.
- 2007  The Heinz Endowments begins its African American Men and Boys Initiative.
-  The Ford Foundation publishes Why We Can't Wait, which indicates that 75 percent of the effective and promising organizations profiled by the Urban Institute in 1995 no longer serve Black males. The Association of Black Foundation Executives, Casey Family Programs, Ford Foundation, and Open Society Foundations host the National Funders' Dialogue on Black Males in Seattle, WA to discuss how to generate more explicit grantmaking strategies for Black males.
-  Thousands of protesters attend a civil rights march in Jena, LA and hold rallies around the country in support of the Jena Six.

2008

The Skillman Foundation makes a policy decision to embed support for Black and brown boys in its grantmaking strategy.

The Open Society Foundations launches the Campaign for Black Male Achievement.

The Kirwan Institute for the Study of Race and Ethnicity publishes a mapping report, funded by the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, designed to expand scholarship on Black males.

Barack Obama is elected President.

The Ford Foundation publishes Momentum: Sustaining Efforts to Improve Life Outcomes Among African-American Males, surveying the landscape of philanthropic efforts supporting Black males and outlining a plan of action.

2009

Eric Holder becomes the first African American to serve as U.S. Attorney General.

The Black Male Donor Collaborative is launched, identifying programs and policies that reduce achievement disparities impacting young Black males in New York City.

2010

Grantmakers for Children, Youth and Families launches Healthy Men, Healthy Communities to improve life outcomes of men and boys of color.

Frontline Solutions and the Twenty-First Century Foundation publish The State of Black Male Commissions: A Survey, documenting the work of Black male commissions nationally.

The California Endowment begins its 10-year Building Healthy Communities campaign, which includes a Boys of Color component.

Oakland Unified School District (CA) dedicates itself to closing the achievement gap for African-American male students, launching the African American Male Achievement initiative, in partnership with the East Bay Community Foundation.

The University of California Press and the Chief Justice Earl Warren Institute on Race, Ethnicity and Diversity publish Changing Places: How Communities Will Improve the Health of Boys of Color, with funding from The California Endowment.

The American Values Institute, John S. and James L. Knight Foundation, and Open Society Foundations host the Black Male Re-Imagined conference to encourage the media industry to help transform how Black males are portrayed in popular culture and public discourse.

2011

The Open Society Foundations and Echoing Green announce the Open Society Black Male Achievement Fellowship, a program for social entrepreneurs dedicated to improving the life outcomes of Black men and boys.

The Open Society Foundations and Bloomberg Philanthropies commit $30 million each to helping young Black and Latino men through New York City's Young Men's Initiative.

The John S. and James L. Knight Foundation and the Open Society Foundations launch the Black Male Engagement (BMe) Challenge in Philadelphia and Detroit, to celebrate and leverage existing assets of Black men in their communities.

The Opportunity Agenda, with funding by the Open Society Foundations, releases Opportunity for Black Men and Boys: Public Opinion, Media Depictions, and Media Consumption, laying out evidence that Black males are grossly overrepresented in depictions of criminality and violence in the media, as compared to documented reality.

Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter and New Orleans Mayor Mitch Landrieu launch Cities United to eliminate violence-related deaths of Black males. Partners include Casey Family Programs, John S. and James L. Knight Foundation, and Open Society Foundations.

The Heinz Endowments' African American Men and Boys Task Force releases Portrayal and Perception: Two Audits of News Media Reporting on African American Men and Boys.

The California Community Foundation launches BLOOM, a five-year, $5 million initiative to redirect Black male youth involved with the L.A. County probation system.

2012

The shooting death of unarmed Florida teen, Trayvon Martin, captures national attention and ignites debate on racial profiling and "stand your ground" laws.

The 2025 Network for Black Men and Boys and Kirwan Institute for the Study of Race & Ethnicity file an amicus brief in Fisher v. University of Texas at Austin, urging the U.S. Supreme Court to uphold the university's admissions procedures that use race as one of many factors in creating a diverse class of freshmen.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation commits $9.5 million to Forward Promise, a three-year initiative to improve the health and success of boys of color.

The Open Society Foundations, in partnership with Root Cause and PolicyLink, launches the Leadership and Sustainability Institute, a national network ensuring the growth, sustainability, and impact of leaders and organizations working to improve life outcomes and create systemic change for Black men and boys.

The Foundation Center and the Open Society Foundations release Where Do We Go From Here? Philanthropic Support for Black Men and Boys, examining national funding patterns in support of Black men and boys.

The Open Society Foundations hosts the inaugural Black Male Achievement Innovation & Impact Forum, gathering philanthropy, government, business, and nonprofit leaders to build on momentum in the field.

2013

The American Values Institute, Open Society Foundations, John S. and James L. Knight Foundation, and Ford Foundation host Black Male Re-Imagined II, a media and communications conversation about Black male perceptions.

The Open Society Foundations and the Foundation Center launch BMAfunders.org.

Leaders of 26 foundations gather in Chicago and pledge to form a national alliance addressing issues facing boys and men of color.

A federal civil rights case puts NYPD's racially discriminatory stop-and-frisk practice on trial.

A Gathering of Leaders convenes 200 social change leaders working to improve opportunities for boys and men of color.

George Zimmerman is acquitted in the killing of Trayvon Martin, leading to nation-wide protests. President Obama responds to the verdict, addressing racial disparities in the application of criminal laws and the need for greater support of young Black men.

October is declared Black Male Achievement Month. #bmaoct

The Leadership and Sustainability Institute is rebranded as the Institute for Black Male Achievement and launches a new web site.

2014

In his State of the Union address, President Obama announces that he is reaching out to foundations and corporations on a new initiative to support young men of color.

The critically acclaimed documentary, American Promise, premieres on PBS and launches Black Male Achievement Week. #BMAweek

Oakland hosts a Black Male Achievement StartUp Weekend, the first hackathon dedicated to how technology can improve the lives of Black males.

A jury finds Michael Dunn guilty of second-degree attempted murder in the shooting death of Jordan Davis, another Black male Florida teen.

Cities United holds its inaugural convening to address the tragic number of violence-related deaths of young Black men.

President Obama launches the “My Brother’s Keeper” initiative, a public-private partnership supporting young men of color.

The Open Society Foundations and Foundation Center release the report Building a Beloved Community: Strengthening the Field of Black Male Achievement.

The My Brother’s Keeper Task Force presents its initial assessments and recommendations in a report to the President.

IBMA selects its first cohort of BMA Innovators, who present their work at the “Investing in Black Male Achievement” Social Impact Exchange pre-conference.

The Open Society Foundations’ Campaign for Black Male Achievement announces its plan to spin off as an independent entity.

An unarmed Michael Brown is shot dead by police, leading to protests in Ferguson, Missouri and calls for justice.

2015

The Campaign for Black Male Achievement spins off from the Open Society Foundations as a stand-alone organization.

The My Brother’s Keeper Task Force releases a one-year progress report to President Obama.

The Campaign for Black Male Achievement and Foundation Center release the research brief Quantifying Hope: Philanthropic Support for Black Men and Boys.

President Obama launches a new nonprofit, the My Brother’s Keeper Alliance.

CBMA selects its second cohort of BMA Innovators, whose work demonstrates powerful results in improving the life outcomes of Black men and boys.

CBMA develops a report tracking city efforts across the country that advance Black Male Achievement in The Promise of Place: Cities Advancing Black Male Achievement.

2016

More than 2,000 people attend “MLK Now,” an event celebrating the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and exploring his message in the current landscape, hosted by Blackout for Human Rights and CBMA.

CBMA releases a new report, Heard, Not Judged: Insights into the Talents, Realities, and Needs of Young Men of Color, exploring what is needed to help young men of color overcome adversity and accomplish their goals.

2017

Police shootings of two Black men, Alton Sterling in Louisiana and Philando Castile in Minnesota, in consecutive days, spark grief, outrage, and protests.

Donald Trump is elected president of the United States.

White nationalists and counterprotesters clash in Charlottesville, VA. President Trump criticizes “many sides.”

The Willam R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust commits more than $5 million to making a difference in the lives of young Black men.

The City of Seattle launches Our Best, an initiative focused specifically on improving life outcomes for young Black men.

New York becomes the first state to adopt My Brother’s Keeper. The 2016-2017 budget includes $20 million to improve outcomes for boys and young men of color.